

Scheidegger, Anne-Marie: Organizational structures in multinational corporations from the perspective of global communication networks. May 1997.

Communication networks undermine bureaucratic principles of organization, because bureaucratic authority relies on restricted communication and the monopoly of knowledge, whereas communication networks facilitate communication and distribute knowledge across the entire organization. Thus, this paper discusses alternatives to bureaucratic organizational structures and argues that they support the efficient, and particularly, effective use of communication networks.